Legacies are for Good.
Mission

Baptist Health Foundation, Inc., supports the health system’s mission through philanthropy and stewardship of gifts that enable Baptist Health hospitals — Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville, Baptist Beaches, Baptist Nassau, Baptist South and Wolfson Children’s Hospital — to continually serve patients and their families and other community health care needs.

Since our first edition of the Legacy Report was published in 2013, we have seen a significant amount of growth in the size and number of endowment gifts made in support of Baptist Health. What began as an annual publication to highlight the impact of endowments has become an important way to illustrate the power these gifts have had on our health system, and how they are shaping our future.

In this third edition, we have featured key areas of need that have been supported by multiple gifts and the unique way each gift came about. We know everyone has something they care deeply about, and it is our goal to align our donors’ passions with very specific funding priorities. Our donors are more than philanthropists — they are true partners.

We often say how grateful we are for the individuals, families and corporations in our community who have generously made endowment gifts to sustain the future of our health system. I want to be clear in telling you that we could not do what we do without you, those who have chosen to so generously give to Baptist Health.

Earlier this year, we entered into the public phase of our first-ever comprehensive campaign, Securing Tomorrow Together. Because of our dedicated supporters, volunteers and leadership, we were able to announce at our kickoff that we had already reached 70 percent of the $100 million fundraising goal. When we established this goal, we could not have anticipated reaching this mark so quickly, and are overwhelmed by the support we have received thus far.

Our community relies on us to provide the best in health care and we depend on the tremendous generosity of our donors to make sure we will always be here for them. We are continually grateful for your support.

Sincerely,

A. Hugh Greene, FACHE

When I begin preparing for the Legacy Report each year, I think about what our donors and constituents would like to know. I also take a look at current and historical trends. Finally, my mind focuses on why we seek private support. The four stories in this year’s publication are but a snapshot of what has been done because of the generosity of many.

In 2013, Baptist Health made a decision to engage donors and volunteers in a systemwide comprehensive campaign, Securing Tomorrow Together. With a goal of $100 million, 61 percent of the need is in endowment growth. For a community focused health system, the goal is significant and endowment building at this level is ahead of national trends. The next two paragraphs and chart below illustrate the phenomenal response to our endowment growth efforts, thus securing support for key areas within Baptist Health in perpetuity.

Three years ago, 68 total endowments had been established for Baptist Health since the Foundation was formed in 1985. Last year, 45 new endowments were added bringing the total to 113. Today, I am pleased to report that as of January 2016, we have reached 185 endowments valued at $76.1 million. Analysis of the past 36 months has revealed several factors which attribute to this substantial growth.

First, Baptist Health and its foundation have made a compelling case for support which merits the creation of endowments. This is evidenced by the wide variety of programs funded. Second, organizing and launching the $100 million systemwide campaign has helped bring attention to the needs of the health system. Baptist’s administrative and volunteer leadership has thoughtfully shaped the endowment priorities of the campaign which have proven to be of interest to many of our donors. The third piece of this success is the commitment made by Baptist Health to match all endowment gifts.

To the right is a chart showing the phenomenal growth in terms of both the corpus (gifts, matching funds and portfolio growth) and number of funds. We are very thankful for the broad base of support for our four adult hospitals and Wolfson Children’s Hospital.

Much has changed at Baptist Health since the last issue of the Legacy Report was published in 2014. The Baptist MD Anderson Cancer Center was established and has officially opened for business. Baptist Health Foundation entered the public phase of the comprehensive campaign, Securing Tomorrow Together, and announced it had reached 70 percent of its fundraising goal at the kickoff event. Walter and Michelle Stys made a transformative gift of $11.3 million in support of Wolfson Children’s Hospital.

The examples above are only a few of the amazing things that are happening at Baptist Health. One of the great joys in my life has been to be a part of the early stages of Securing Tomorrow Together as chair of the Baptist Health Foundation. I have seen tremendous generosity from many people who believe in our health system and want to make a difference, just like I do. It is a privilege to have the opportunity to work with the amazing leaders and community volunteers that serve Baptist Health.

We created the Legacy Report to highlight Baptist Health Foundation’s endowments, but in a way it has become a visual representation of the tremendous generosity of our community. Aside from the obvious increase in the size of the endowment, we cannot begin to estimate the number of lives that are touched by your support.

Endowments provide financial security and support for the health system, while allowing our donors to create a legacy of perpetual support for Baptist Health’s services, programs, patients and even team members. Baptist Health is in a unique position to be able to plan far into the future, anticipating the needs of our community, all because of your generosity. The motivation, intention and hearts behind the gifts named within these pages is incredibly moving. We continue to be humbled by your support.

Sincerely,

Michael K. Diaz

Sustaining the Model of Care

“Just be strong,” Nicole O’Sullivan reminded herself almost every day during the four months that her daughter, Leighton, spent in the Wolfson Children’s Hospital newborn intensive care unit (NICU).

But sometimes that mantra wasn't enough. Life in the NICU was full of “ups and downs,” Nicole says, because of Leighton’s delicate health. A “micro-preemie,” she was born at 23 weeks and weighed only 1½ pounds. And when she wasn’t worrying about Leighton, Nicole missed being home with her other children, and she was concerned for her husband who was juggling work, caring for the older children, and wrestling with his own anxieties about Leighton’s condition.

Fortunately, Nicole wasn’t alone. In addition to her husband’s support, she talked frequently with Wendy Sheroke-Hughes, a mental health counselor at Wolfson Children’s who works with families in the NICU and pediatric intensive care unit. “She helped me so much, just by listening to me,” says Nicole. “I don’t know how people get through a journey like ours without someone like Wendy.”

A new endowment and other support from the Hall-Halliburton Foundation made it possible for the hospital to add Ms. Sheroke-Hughes, a mental health counselor at Wolfson Children’s who works with families in the NICU and pediatric intensive care unit. “We want to ‘move the needle’ when we make a gift,” says Randolph Mahoney, president of the Hall-Halliburton Foundation. “We see an exciting opportunity to do that with Child Life and behavioral health because of the impact those areas have in healing, and the lack of funding for them.”

Ruth Shugart is another new endowment donor who has stepped forward to make a difference for Child Life. Established in August 2015, her endowment honors her family’s legacy in the community, and she, too, chose Child Life because of its potential impact. Her goal is to ensure that children have the best possible experience while in the hospital.

“Endowments help fund crucial services, and they give us a certain amount of financial security that makes a tremendous difference for the years ahead,” Mr. Aubin says. “Instead of wondering how we’re going to fund something, we can innovate and find better ways to care for children and their families.”

Leighton O’Sullivan is a happy, healthy child today.
Making Cancer History

Opening a new cancer center that represents two organizations who, collectively, promise to “change health care for good” and “end cancer” is a daunting challenge says Joe B. (Bill) Putnam Jr., MD, medical director of the new Baptist MD Anderson Cancer Center. But Dr. Putnam feels confident about the cancer center’s potential for meeting those expectations, thanks to recent endowments that support the center.

“It was gratifying, to say the least, to know that donors have begun to demonstrate their passion and commitment to our cancer center, even before we opened our doors in October,” Dr. Putnam says. “And endowments are exactly what we need to enhance our programs and recruit additional outstanding faculty. Our collective vision is focused and far-reaching. We want to end cancer and ensure that our community and region always have access to world-class cancer care.”

The cancer center will pursue those goals with a multi-disciplinary staff who works together, as a team, in one location, to provide every cancer patient with convenient, holistic care that addresses all of their medical, emotional and spiritual needs. Endowments are critical to that model because they provide a permanent funding source for all of the center’s staff and other operational needs. Since the announcement of the Baptist MD Anderson partnership was made, nine new endowments have been created.

One of the first of these new endowments came from the family of Charles Baggs, a long-time member of the Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville Board and the health system’s Social Responsibility and Community Health Committee. The Baggs Family Endowment is receiving a 100 percent match from Baptist Health and its funding will support general operations at the cancer center.

“I’ve been a part of Baptist Health for many years,” says Mr. Baggs, “but the addition of the Baptist MD Anderson Cancer Center to the roster of services brings the health system’s level of prestige to a whole other level.”

Some, like John (Jack) Williams Jr., have chosen to make gifts to symbolize victory over cancer. In honor of his wife, Norma, a cancer survivor, Mr. Williams wanted to do something to make the treatment experience as comfortable as possible for patients and their loved ones. The pair created an endowment that will provide for upgrades and updates to the infusion center at Williams Treatment Center, offering a calming and aesthetically pleasing area to those going through infusion treatments.

“When Norma was going through her battle with cancer,” John recalls, “both she and I decided that we wanted to make a gift which would help others facing similar situations. It’s our hope that our gift will provide some comfort to cancer patients and their families and will give them the strength they need to push through.”

Advocates for the underserved population, Dr. Levin and his wife, Joan, also felt the need to support cancer care for our community. They were impressed to learn Baptist Health was partnering with MD Anderson Cancer Center and wanted to help bring the finest care to our community. The couple made a gift that will support cancer patients who cannot afford the care they require, providing screenings, infusions, transportation, support groups, educational materials and other expenses which are directly associated to their treatment and care.

The Jacksonville Jaguars and Jaguars Women’s Association have always believed it is important to help those who cannot support themselves, specifically for the prevention and treatment of breast cancer. Their foundation established an endowment that will help fund diagnostic and interventional breast imaging services for the underserved, uninsured and underinsured.

Any time Baptist Health creates a new center, the leadership team requires a significant amount of support to get the programs and people in place to make it a success which is why Deanie and Jay Stein made their gift to the Baptist MD Anderson Cancer Center. As the first director’s endowment, the fund will provide for necessary equipment, construction and renovation costs, recruitment and educational opportunities for not only team members, but also patients and their families.

Similarly, longtime members of the Jacksonville community, Blanche and Luther Coggin created an endowment that will provide Baptist Health with a perpetual source of funds for the enhancement of cancer care through the partnership. The couple believes the addition of the Baptist MD Anderson Cancer Center is extremely beneficial for our community and wanted to do their part to solidify its future.

A board member and longtime volunteer leader, Preston Haskell chaired a previous fundraising campaign for Baptist Health and understands the significance of the Baptist MD Anderson partnership for our region. He and his wife, Joan, created an endowment which will be used to provide support for all aspects of cancer care in relation to the Baptist Health and MD Anderson partnership, which includes everything from technology and equipment to patient and caregiver support.

“In anticipation of the good that will come of this partnership for our region, Joan and I felt it was so desirable to support this endeavor,” said Mr. Haskell. “Like Dr. Putnam, we believe Baptist MD Anderson Cancer Center will help change the future of cancer care and identify the cure.”
Working Together to Enhance Patient Care

As chief medical officer of Baptist Health, Keith Stein, MD, interacts with hundreds of physicians across the health system and sees first-hand their dedication to patients and Baptist Health’s mission. But even he finds inspiration in recent endowment gifts that his physician colleagues have established at Baptist Health in support of the current comprehensive campaign, Securing Tomorrow Together.

“It’s no surprise to me that we have dedicated physicians,” Dr. Stein says. “I see their dedication every day, in their work with our patients, and I’m tremendously grateful for that. But so many have even gone beyond for this campaign, establishing endowments that will benefit patients and the health system in perpetuity, and it creates a profound realization. I have amazing colleagues and I am fortunate to work with them to improve our community’s health care.”

An example is Mori, Bean & Brooks, PA, which provides radiology services throughout the health system’s adult hospitals. In 2014, that physician group made a campaign group pledge for an endowment for radiology services, which supports nearly every patient who receives care, inpatient or outpatient, at any Baptist Health campus. Their recent gift received matching funds from Baptist Health, adding a new chapter to their philanthropic support for the health system, which dates back to 1985 and totals nearly $2 million.

“As caregivers, it’s important that we support Baptist Health in this campaign. Our goals align with those of Baptist Health’s leadership,” says Kurt Mori, MD, Baptist Health Foundation Board of Trustees Vice Chair. “We are all working to improve the level of care available for our patients, and want to ensure that care will always be available for our community.”

A story of similar impact and inspiration is coming to life through the philanthropy of Emergency Resources Group (ERG), which staffs all of the emergency centers at Baptist Health’s adult hospitals as well as at Baptist Clay Medical Campus.

Their endowment, also part of Securing Tomorrow Together, is receiving matching funds from Baptist Health, which will help ensure that children, families and adults always have access to prompt, accurate and compassionate emergency care. The group has supported Baptist Health philanthropically for nearly three decades, and given more than $1 million.

“The physicians at ERG feel strongly about supporting Baptist Health because we know the health system relies on philanthropy for its future success,” says Richard Stromberg, MD, Emergency Resources Group President. “Baptist Health is such an integral part of our community, and we feel it is our responsibility to help ensure it continues to be successful at providing the best in patient care for many years to come.”

Florida Anesthesia Associates, which staffs many of the health system’s operating rooms, began supporting Baptist Health in 1995. In 2014, the group came together to make a leadership campaign commitment, establishing an endowment that will support the education, research and patient care activities related to anesthesiology at Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville and South.

Mark Kramp, MD, with Florida Anesthesia Associates explained, “I see their dedication, and I believe in Baptist Health. I have made a gift in support of this campaign just makes sense.”

Baptist Primary Care recently established an endowment for patient service enhancements in the areas of care transition, population health management, technology improvements and education. With over 200 physicians employed by Baptist Health, they are pooling their personal resources to have an impact on those in need of medical care. In addition to the physicians’ support, many of their team members have also made gifts toward the endowment which demonstrates the practice’s commitment to Baptist Health.

Perry Carlos, DO, chairman of Baptist Primary Care, and Chief Medical Officer Jim Clower, MD, agree, “It was very important for us to give back to Baptist Health because we feel so strongly about ensuring the best in patient health services for our community are always available.”

Many physicians, as well as members of their staff, at these four groups are pooling their personal resources to support these endowments, with more coming on board. That inspires Dr. Stein, as does the range of specialties their gifts represents. He says, “It’s a source of confidence for me — and I hope it is for the community as well — that my physician colleagues are together creating endowments that fund essential services at our hospitals.”
Paving the Way for Future Nurses

Nursing quality is a continuous journey, which is why Diane Raines, DNP, senior vice president and chief nursing officer for Baptist Health, is grateful for recent endowments that will help fund the training of present and future nurses, in perpetuity.

“The nursing profession and medicine are constantly improving and evolving,” Dr. Raines says. “Continuing education and training are necessary for our hospitals — and the thousands of nurses we employ — to deliver the best patient care possible, and Magnet status affirms this claim.”

Dr. Raines and her colleagues have established a comprehensive set of programs to foster the ongoing pursuit of nursing excellence, which includes the Homeyer Institute for Education and Research funded by Bruce and Judy Homeyer; scholarships; collaborative programs with local colleges; systemwide activities, such as the Spirit of Caregiving, which help nurses sustain their passion for health care; and a newly established residency for nurses who are just starting their careers.

Recent endowments are supporting and helping expand this portfolio of programs. The Eartha M.M. White Charitable Fund at The Community Foundation for Northeast Florida, for example, is partnering with Florida A&M University (FAMU) to fund a preceptorship endowment for students at FAMU’s school of nursing. The funding will allow the students to receive clinical training at Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville before they graduate, which will help prepare the next generation of nurses to meet the demands of nursing at a complex medical center.

“The FAMU/Baptist Health Student Nursing Endowment was created because we want to ensure a strong base of nursing professionals is always available in our community,” says Cleve Warren, FAMU Board of Trustees Chair and Baptist Health Foundation board member. “Through practical experience, the nurses of tomorrow will have a distinct advantage which only benefits our patients.”

Specialized care and nursing excellence are also the focus of another new endowment, the Joel P. Schrank, MD Excellence in Cardiac Nursing Endowment. This fund will support continuing education for an outstanding nurse in cardiology each year at Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville. An anonymous donor made this gift in honor of Dr. Schrank who has practiced in Jacksonville for 40 years.

“Often considered one of the best cardiologists in our region, Dr. Schrank shows a great deal of respect and compassion for his peers,” says Keith Stein, MD, chief medical officer of Baptist Health.

A skilled nursing staff is essential to a patient’s success, which is why Dr. Robert Ellison and his wife, Penny, a registered nurse herself, established an endowment to fund the education needs of nurses at Baptist Medical Center Jacksonville. Known for their generosity and compassion, Dr. Ellison, a vascular surgeon, and Penny wanted to show their appreciation for the dedicated nurses at Baptist Jacksonville by making this gift, which will provide the funds for nurses who want to continue their education and training and will ensure our community’s base of nursing professionals is second to none.

“We feel strongly that the nurse is the core of patient care and satisfaction,” says Dr. Ellison, “and want Baptist Health to be renowned for its exceptional nursing staff.”

Long-time supporters of Baptist Health, the Kirbo Charitable Trust supports broader activities through a recent endowment that funds continuing nursing education at Baptist Health. The Trust’s most recent gift builds on their previous support for the health system, which began in 1991 and now totals more than $1.5 million.

Elizabeth Gunn, MSN, RN, vice president of Patient Services for Baptist Medical Center South, also established an endowment to support nursing scholarships. Her gift, made in honor of her husband, provides nursing scholarships for Baptist South team members with preference given to those who are pursuing degrees in nursing as their second career but may also be used to help those who are working toward their bachelors or advanced nursing degree.

“These gifts are inspiring in so many ways, not only because of the tremendous generosity of our donors, but also their appreciation for the importance of nursing and the diversity of the field,” Dr. Raines says. “Thanks to these gifts and other support, we can strategically approach our commitment to nursing excellence, starting with students before they graduate, moving on to continuing education for all of our nurses and even funding activities for very specialized areas.”

Endowed Funds and Financials

Calculation of Endowment Value

Last year, the Baptist Health Foundation began calculating the five percent annual spending rate as of June 30, 2014. We have again used June 30, 2015 to “run the numbers” thus providing those responsible for allocating these dollars a few month’s advance notice before the beginning of the fiscal year on October 1. This approach has proved beneficial to all involved.

The five percent spending allocation is the maximum allowed per the spending policy which means some endowments will generate less than five percent in any given year. The reasons vary but examples include timing when new funds were established or when additional funds are added to existing endowments.

Lastly, you will note that a number of funds have no dollars listed even though gifts have been made since July 1, 2015. For purposes of this report, we are tracking June 30 numbers only.

For donors who have questions, please do not hesitate to contact me at 904.202.2449 or pierre.allaire@bmcjax.com.

Heaton Smith Group: A Complimentary Service for Donors from Baptist Health Foundation

Planning for your tomorrow starts today. As a loyal supporter of Baptist Health, we invite you to take advantage of the complimentary estate planning services offered through Baptist Health Foundation. The Heaton Smith Group is a values-based legacy planning consultancy that helps people fulfill the goals for their families, finances and charities.

Why? Heaton Smith aims to help you, our donors and friends, create a plan for your legacy which reflects your personal values. A unique program for non-profits, the group has absolutely no products to sell and does not manage any money.

How? Heaton Smith asks the right questions about you, your family and your philanthropic goals to make recommendations tailored to you. Their legacy planning process is unique and it works.

“The Heaton Smith Group helped shine a light on some things we had not discussed previously. Although they never tried to sell us anything, nor did they push the idea of giving to Baptist Health, their guidance was instrumental in helping us make our decision.”

Tom Rackley

Cheryl and Tom Rackley

The process, outlined below, assists those interested in looking at ways they can increase giving now and later in life.

1. A Heaton Smith consultant will meet with you individually and privately to have you complete a questionnaire regarding family, financial and charitable legacy goals. This information is entirely confidential.

2. With your goals, needs and objectives captured, the consultant writes a Family Financial Philosophy with detailed recommendations to satisfy your goals with respect to your family, finances and charitable objectives.

3. You and a Heaton Smith consultant if requested, may then meet with your estate planning attorney to review the recommendations and execute new legal documents.

We invite you to take advantage of Heaton Smith’s expertise. For more information, please contact Baptist Health Foundation at 904.202.1693 or troy.munn@baptistjax.com.

WHAT IS YOUR LEGACY?

You can leave behind a legacy of caring that will provide Baptist Health with security and stability for years to come. Gifts from wills and estates, or planned gifts, enhance our ability to plan and prepare for the future and ensure the highest quality of health care is available for our community, while celebrating your generosity.
